

Fish collagen, distinctively prevalent in animals, plants, and fish, offers a remarkable advantage. Unlike animal-sourced collagen, which is susceptible to viruses, and plant-derived collagen, containing incompatible amino acids, fish collagen boasts structural compatibility with the human body.

Its resemblance to human tissue facilitates optimal absorption. Furthermore, fish scale collagen regenerates harmoniously with the human body, a feature unmatched by traditional collagen masks. These conventional masks, with larger collagen molecules, fail to penetrate beyond the skin's surface, functioning merely as superficial moisturizers. Fish collagen, possessing smaller molecules, excels in deep skin penetration, resulting in effective hydration and moisturization.
